Sphere: Here be Dragons

Here be Dragons is an exhibition of work by the Sphere artist collective (Chris Wille and Brian Patrick Franklin), addressing security and privacy in our electronic era. Each work approaches the role and function of the TOR network, an important tool for maintaining anonymity on the internet, from varying angles seeking to give a physical and emotional presence to the activity traveling through the network.

William Daniels: On Pins & Needles

William Daniels is a multidisciplinary artist who works primarily in textiles, combining the contemporary and the archaic. His fine art quilts and accessories feature traditional quilt blocking and paper piecing techniques, which he combines with nontraditional components and materials. Daniels derives inspiration from anthropology and urban art practices that confront contemporary issues, and is always experimenting to integrate modern archetypes with historical, societal, or spiritual topics.

Ogeechee Theatre,
Student Union,
Armstrong Campus

A coming-of-age drama based on a serialized newspaper novel by Yoshida Shuichi. It nostalgically depicts the interactions between a good-natured young man and his friends, while interweaving the past and present. In 1987, a youth named Yonosuke who is unable to decline the requests of others leaves his hometown of Nagasaki to start university life in Tokyo. One day as he is juggling classes and extracurricular activities, he goes to a driving school and meets Shoko, the daughter of a company president, who takes a liking to him.
